Gabrielle Lord has worked in many different areas: sales, teaching, brick-cleaning, peach-picking and packing, and in the Public Service as an employment officer. She started writing seriously aged 30.

Her first two manuscripts ended up composting tomatoes, but the third one, Fortress, was picked up internationally and made into a feature film. A later novel, Whipping Boy, was made into a telemovie starring Sigrid Thornton. The film, coinciding with her daughter leaving school, allowed Gabrielle to write full-time and lead a more 'normal' writer's life—hanging around with scientists and detectives, badgering forensic anthropologists (she studied Anatomy at Sydney University) and doing work experience with a busy private security business.

Research is everything, she says. 'Out of my contacts with experts (who are always far too modest to describe themselves that way) I get not only the fine-tuning necessary for today's savvy readers, but also wonderful incidents and images that enrich and enlarge my books.'

Gabrielle Lord is the author of international best-selling series Conspiracy 365, for ages 10+, which was also made into a TV series. Conspiracy 365 has grown from its original 12 books to 17 and has been published in the UK, USA, France, Germany, Holland, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Brazil, Portugal, Turkey, Indonesia and China—twice—in English and Chinese characters as well. It has also been sold into nine Asian countries by Scholastic Malaysia.

Her new series '48 Hours', sees two teen investigators crack crimes.
