But where were her friends?

Bella ran over and looked by the water bowl fountain. But her friends weren't there.

Bella darted between the houses of Meow Town.

She looked in the cake shop. But they weren't there, either.

She wounded over Windmill Bridge and leaped over the stepping-stone path of Squeaky Creek.

Then Bella turned a corner, and at last she spotted her friends. They were lying outside on the grass by the pond. It was one of the nicest places in all of Meow Town.

- 11-year-old Billie tells her story, and the greater story of Sydney in this time period, in a diary-style format.

Victoria Street is a crossroads, like in those old stories of bushrangers and highwaymen. It's a place where everyone and everything crosses paths ... A street right out of a fairytale, I reckon.

It's 1973, and 11-year-old Billie is living in the best street in the whole world: Victoria Street in Darlinghurst, Sydney. Billie can't imagine being anywhere else.

But things are changing. Billie's neighbours are being forced out of their homes, and scary people are patrolling the street, trying to get everyone to leave. Without realising it, Billie, her family and her neighbours find themselves caught up in one of the most important public protests in Sydney's history. Determined to chart her own path, Merida follows magical wisps to a witch's cottage, where she is given a tiny cake and promised it will incite 'a great transformation' in her mother. But instead of feeding Elinor the witch's cake, Merida eats it herself. Merida awakens in the past, with a teenage Elinor holding a knife to her throat and accusing her of espionage.
